BANQUET IN HONOR OF GRAND DUCHESS

Two Reigning Sovereigns, Both Women, Exchange Liquid Courtesies.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.

WOMEN here, especially those interested in the movement to obtain for their sex the same rights as men, should take note of a state visit paid within the last fortnight by the young Grand Duchess of Luxembourg to the court of the Emperor Nicholas, who was welcomed with much pomp and ceremony by Queen Wilhelmine.

Among the features of the festivities organized in honor of the fair visitor from Luxembourg, was a grand banquet at the royal palace, during the course of which Queen Wilhelmine toasted the grand duchess in a French speech, recalling the times when the destinies of Luxembourg were confided to the hands of the Grange dynasty. The young grand duchess, replying in the same language, called upon all present to drink to the health of Queen Wilhelmine and of the Dutch royal family.

It was the first time within living memory of two reigning sovereigns—both of them women, and each a monarch in her own right—thus exchanging liquid courtesies of this kind at a state banquet, and the incident certainly suggests the reflection that if women, and even more girls, are able to exercise the duties of rulership over civilized and prosperous states, they may surely be trusted to assume and fulfill the minor obligations of ordinary citizenship.

It has been sometimes asserted that if all the throne of Europe were occupied, like those of Holland and of Luxembourg, by women, instead of men, there would be far less danger of war, and but little necessity of those so-called expensive armaments. But history does not sustain this argument. For the long reign of Queen Victoria over Great Britain was signalized by several great wars and insurrections, and the reign of Empress Maria Theresa's reign has always been remembered in connection with the Seven Years War, and the French Revolution, the elimination of the stern sex from the role of sovereign, and the substitution in their stead of women, would be calculated to impair rather than to improve the faint prospects of universal peace.

King Alfonso has caused the issue of an official denial of the so widely printed story to effect that he proposed to visit the Argentine Republic, the communique declaring that "such a voyage is considered to be outside of official possibilities."

It is thought he would have received a most friendly welcome at Buenos Aires and elsewhere in the Argentine Republic, but there is no doubt, judging by the enthusiasm with which his aunt, the Infanta Isabel, was hailed there last year, that his visit might, however, create some embarrassment of an international character, in connection with manifestations of his popularity in the Latin republics of America. For a very pronounced personal sympathy exists there for the reigning house of Spain, particularly among those Central and South Americans who pride themselves on their Spanish ancestry.

This sympathy has found expression in the recent dispatch of a number of petitions from Spaniards in Mexico, the Argentine Republic and Chile, to the Cortes at Madrid; petitions which King Alfonso's government has been obliged to refuse, as being contrary to law.

Lord Reading, the new Lord Chief Justice of England, might reasonably be expected to be acquainted with the law of the land. Yet he made a curious mistake in a recent case, referring to himself in a speech at a dinner given by the Macabean Society in London, to celebrate his elevation to the bench, he expatiated on the fact that there is no bar by reason of religion or race to the position which a man may attain in Great Britain; not even the Lord Chancellorship.

But the statute book distinctly contains very definite barring Roman Catholics from the positions of Lord High Chancellor of England and from the vicereignty of Ireland; and when an attempt was made some twenty years ago or so to repeal these laws so as to render the late Marquis of Ripon and the late Lord Russell of Killowen eligible for the Lord High Chancellorship—the measure was popularly known as the Russell and Ripon repeal bill—it was defeated by a large vote in the House of Commons. It is, therefore, a mistake to state that there is no bar by reason of religion to any office in Great Britain, not even the Lord Chancellorship." There is nothing, however, on the statute book to prevent a Jew from being elevated to the woolsack.

Emperor Nicholas has bestowed a rare mark of distinction upon Theophile Delcasse, on the latter's retirement from the post of ambassador of France at St. Petersburg, which he has only held for ten months. For he has conferred upon him the Order of St. Andrew, which is the Russian counterpart of the English Order of the Garter, the Austrian Order of the Golden Fleece, of the Italian Annunziata, and of the Kaiser's Order of the Black Eagle. Those who possess it are, ipso facto, members of all other Muscovite orders of knighthood, and until now the only Frenchmen who have received it have been some of the Presidents of the French republic.

There are not more than eight or ten Russian knights of the order, outside of the imperial family; and even statesmen whose names are such household words, both at home and abroad, as Count Serbuloff, Witte, or Kokovoff, the present Prime Minister of Russia, have not as yet been considered worthy of the honor.

It is an order that was founded by Empress Catherine. The insignia consist of a gold chain, in which the Russian double-headed eagle is the main feature, the figure and cross of St. Andrew being represented on the star and jewel, with which a blue ribbon, resembling that of the English Order of the Garter, is worn across the breast, from shoulder to hip.

Inasmuch as Delcasse has resigned the ambassadorship because he finds it a disadvantage to the present Cabinet in Paris on the subject of foreign relations, especially where Russia is concerned, the action of the Czar in thus distinguishing him is very significant, and can only be regarded as an indication that Emperor Nicholas has approved of Delcasse's policy at St. Petersburg, and is, therefore, opposed to the course now adopted by the French administration.

Delcasse, though so eminent as a masterful statesman, as an able diplomatist, and as one of the principal authors, not merely of the Franco-Russian alliance, but of the Triple Entente, but also of the triple entente, cannot be considered in the light of a very ornamental addition to the Order of St. Andrew.

For he is extremely short and very homely, indeed, a perfect delight to the French caricaturists and comic sheets, who, surnaming him "Le Pou," which may be euphemistically translated as "The Flea," have always delighted in representing him in the guise of this unbecoming household insect. With his walrus-like mustache, his low forehead, his flat, upturned nose, and his extremely large ears, he is about the ugliest statesman who has ever held Cabinet or diplomatic office in France since the days of the great Talleyrand.

ALEXANDRIA ARS SCHOOL SQUABBLE

Files Charges Against Superintendent Hodges, Who Is Warmly Defended.

The Senate Committee on Nominations devoted a long session yesterday afternoon to a hearing on the question of ratifying the appointment of W. T. Hodges as superintendent of schools of Alexandria County. Prominent citizens of the county proffered charges of malfeasance against Mr. Hodges, and equally prominent citizens came warmly to his support.

Mr. Hodges was appointed last summer by the State Board of Education. The specific charge made against him yesterday was that he received, in violation of the law, a $500 increase in salary vote him by the school board of Alexandria County over and above the $1,200 a year paid him by the county's Board of Supervisors.

Against Mr. Hodges appeared A. Davis, Jr., and Major E. W. R. Ewing, both of Alexandria County. They contended that Mr. Hodges violated the law in permitting the school board to pay him the $500 increase over the regular salary for which he had agreed to work.

Witnesses for Mr. Hodges included two of the three members of the Board of Supervisors, the entire county school board, George H. Rucker, county clerk, and half a dozen other prominent citizens. They held the Senate committee that the increase was voted to Mr. Hodges while the later was absent at the university, and that he had no hand in influencing the action. It was their belief that he was entitled to the increase as reward for his efficient work as superintendent of schools.

The committee took the matter under advisement and will probably report its recommendation to the Senate to-day or to-morrow. It is regarded as probable that Mr. Hodges will be absolved from all blame, and that his nomination will be confirmed. The committee consists of Senator Featherston, chairman, and Senators Echols, Rison and Hobbs.
